Beth Israel Hospital

Report of the 64th Annual Meeting

Including Summary Statistics for Fiscal Year 1979

The Annual Meeting

The theme for Beth Israel Hospital's 64th Annual Meeting was "The 80's: Into a New Decade." The principal address, on the future of teaching hospitals, was delivered by Robert G. Petersdorf, MD, president of Affiliated Hospitals Center.

The hospital's year was reviewed by Stanley H. Feldberg, president of the board of trustees, and Mitchell T. Rabkin, MD, general director. Contributions to the hospital from fundraising efforts by the Women's Auxiliary and the Men's Associates were presented by Mrs. Miriam G. Dane and Albert J. Isgur, presidents of those organizations.

Excerpts of the remarks by Dr. Petersdorf, Mr. Feldberg, and Dr. Rabkin are included in this report.

Other highlights of the annual meeting included election of officers and trustees; recognition of years of service by the medical and dental staffs; and presentations of citations of honor.

On the Cover

Beth Israel Hospital and Boston. This view, from atop 400 Brookline Avenue, shows historic and modern Boston stretched out beyond the hospital, itself a blend of the historic and the contemporary. Along the skyline can be seen the Prudential and Hancock towers and other office buildings. Also visible are the Charles River, the Fenway, the State House Dome, and Symphony Hall.

Report of the President, Stanley H. Feldberg

I look back on the three years I have been privileged to serve with satisfaction and gratitude: satisfaction with the direction the hospital has taken with its fiscal stability in the face of an erratic economy; satisfaction with the continuity and growth of Beth Israel's role as a provider of excellent care, and as a major teaching institution; gratitude for the opportunity to serve with the extraordinary men and women who are the trustees, medical staff, volunteers, administrators, and employees of our marvelous hospital.

I also take great personal satisfaction in being one link in a chain that stretches back to the founding of the hospital and ahead into the future. We stand on the shoulders of giants, and that is both our great fortune and our responsibility to continue building on the foundations that were put into place by our remarkable predecessors.

We are entering a new decade, one that will in all likelihood present economic and regulatory challenges surpassing any that we have faced before. I think we are extraordinarily fortunate that Norman Leventhal and his newly elected fellow officers will be leading us into a period that will demand all the ingenuity, foresight, and sound management that can be mustered. The job is a big one—and they are the ones to do it.

Those who have become trustees for the first time today have the opportunity to take an active part in one of the most remarkable enterprises of our society and community. Mistake it not: Beth Israel is not just another institution—it is, in fact, all the things that many hospitals say they would like to be. It is among the world's foremost teaching hospitals; it includes a major center for medical research, the Harvard-Thorndike Laboratory; it is a recognized innovative leader in such important areas as patients' rights, primary nursing care, ambulatory health services, and, most of all, sensitivity to both the emotional and medical needs of our patients.

We can all take pride in the sixty-fourth year of Beth Israel's history. Thanks to efficient management, the hospital was able to conclude the year with an excess of revenue over expenses that will provide a much-needed and full funding of our depreciation account.

During the year, a committee of trustees, administrators, and members of the medical staff was able to identify and set priorities for our capital requirements for the next five years. This committee determined that the capital requirements would amount to some $32 million. Further study during the year has updated this number to over $40 million. It is clearly a major task for us to develop mechanisms for raising the funds that will enable Beth Israel to meet its needs in patient care and research. One of the basic mechanisms is to make sure that we operate to produce a surplus.

This year has seen a substantial growth in the volume of inpatient census—from 145,000 patient days the previous year to 154,000 patient days this year—along with decreases in average length of stay for both medical and surgical patients. This means that we were able to care for more patients, and to get them out of the hospital sooner. I should point out that Beth Israel is one of the few hospitals to experience growth in volume, and it is one reason why our cost per stay has increased at a relatively modest rate over the past several years.

Last spring, we learned with regret of Dr. Franklin Epstein's decision to step down from his position as physician-in-chief. Dr. Epstein continued to build the great teaching and research service of Beth Israel, and we hope that we will be able to live up to and fulfill that tradition in the future. A Harvard Medical School/Beth Israel Hospital search committee headed by Dr. William Silen, surgeon-in-chief, and including several tenured faculty members as well as Dr. Rabkin and myself, has been active for several months seeking a successor. We anticipate that an announcement can be made in the fairly near future.

I'm sure many of you are aware that Beth Israel has been much in the news over the past year. Feature stories on research and patient care have appeared frequently in local, national, and even overseas media—both print and broadcast—and such regular exposure is an important factor not only in public education but in marketing the hospital's services as well.

Among our most important constituencies, of course, is the Jewish community of Boston. During the year, we have worked closely with the various agencies to promote and maintain those qualities which make our hospital a unique and welcome place for the community. We have been particularly concerned about our responsibility to Russian immigrants, and several months ago put on our staff a full-time Russian interpreter. During the past year, there were more than 3,500 visits to our ambulatory services by Russian Jews. The combined cost of free ambulatory and inpatient services provided by the hospital to this immigrant group was over $350,000.

Our "BI Shuttle" service to the Jewish Community Housing for the Elderly has been very successful and this little carrier of goodwill has transported more than 2,000 passengers between JCHE and the hospital during its first year.

The importance of the relationship illustrated by these two examples is that the roots of Beth Israel remain where they have always been—in the Jewish community of Greater Boston.

No review of the year can be complete without mentioning the magnificent support of the Women's Auxiliary and the Men's Associates. Each group has contributed financially in a major way, and we are deeply grateful. But we are equally thankful for something less tangible—the unwavering spirit and goodwill of these volunteers, and their great enthusiasm for the work of the hospital.

I envision the continued success of Beth Israel as resting on three premises:

First, that the role of the hospital as a teaching institution and provider of care must be clearly defined. This definition should not be static and conceived to be valid for 20 to 50 years; but, rather, the definition must be dynamic: ready to change, with a changing society. This definition must encompass our relationship with a society at large—with other segments of the health care community—with the neighborhoods we serve—and with the Jewish community.

Second, that the hospital continue to provide the physical properties and essential space needed to fulfill the role definition. To detail a few important needs:

- We need additional research space to honor our commitments to the Thorndike Laboratory and to provide for the needs of the other medical services.
- We must modernize and expand the Berenson Emergency Unit.
- We must modernize and expand the labor and delivery suite of the ob/gyn service.
- And, we must finish the job of renovating and updating patient rooms that include 276 beds.

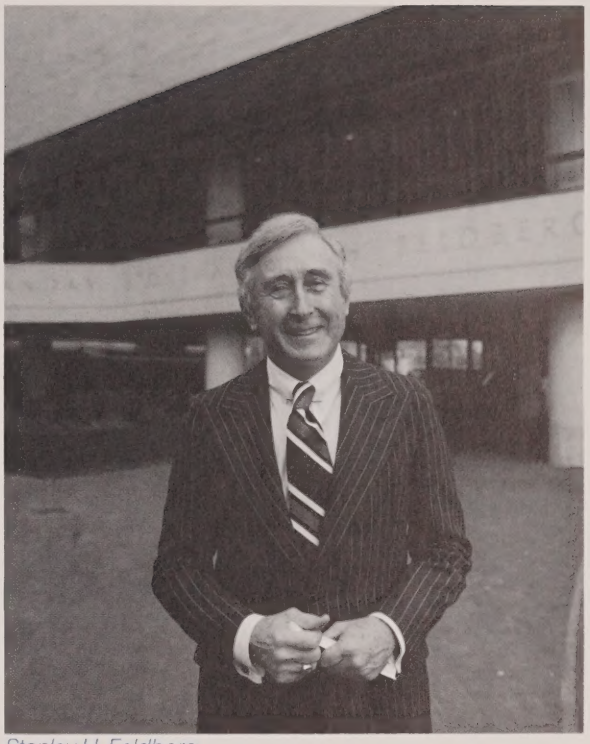
The third fundamental premise is that we continue to demonstrate the hospital's ability to manage itself effectively and efficiently and in a fiscally sound manner. In that way, we can continue to demonstrate that Beth Israel is a sound investment for grants, gifts, bequests, and loans. In that way, we can provide the needed dollars to accomplish the above.

The three elements of this "tripod" I have described will be developed by administration, staff, and trustees who are sensitive to the growing and changing needs of society, flexible enough to meet the challenges of increasing government regulation, and ever-conscious of the bedrock mission that has been Beth Israel's from the very beginning: to provide the best possible care for all who seek our services, to maintain excellence of scholarship in training the doctors of the future, and to pursue research to meet not only our concern for today, but our obligation to tomorrow as well.

Finally, I hardly need tell you how highly I, and all of us, regard Dr. Mitchell Rabkin. I treasure my association with him, and I know that somewhere near the center of every advance, every good thing that happens at Beth Israel Hospital, you'll find Mitch Rabkin.

And I thank all the "Beth Israel Family" for its help and support. I salute the new officers and trustees and ask that you provide that same support to them.

From the bottom of my heart, I thank you for the opportunity to have served as president of this great Beth Israel, and I look forward to continuing what is, for me, truly a labor of love.



Stanley H. Feldberg

"The ambience of the Feldberg Building is splendid, for patients and visitors alike. The colored carpets, nature photos, use of natural wood, light-flooded solarium, even the shape of the floor plan support the patient as he or she recovers."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"The care and kindness of the nursing service goes far beyond the call of duty. They are truly the greatest."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"I never had such wonderful nursing care. I understand you are using 'primary nursing care.' It is wonderful."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"Food was 'good' which is excellent for the nature of your task."

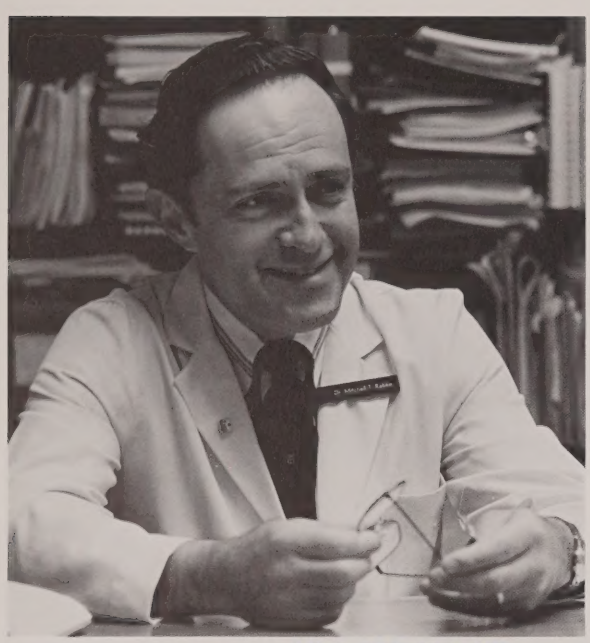
Report of the General Director, Mitchell T. Rabkin, MD



Mitchell T. Rabkin, MD

"I was constantly aware of a complete dedication to patient welfare. Over the years I've followed with great interest the Beth Israel's growing prestige, but not until I experienced it personally did I realize how well deserved that reputation was."
—A Beth Israel Patient

The challenge for today's teaching hospital is to continue its technical excellence, maintain a warm and personal atmosphere, care for increasing numbers of patients and still cut costs, all within a regulatory and reimbursement environment which tends poorly to support such virtues. Yet we do have an encouraging report. With good medical and nursing care, we have trimmed 4 per cent off the average length of stay in medicine and surgery compared to last year, and that was 3 per cent lower than the year before. The cost of an individual hospitalization at Beth Israel remained unchanged from the prior year, because of shorter stays and because we've cared for more patients than ever before, using our now full complement of 452 beds.

Careful management control has kept our operating expense within budget despite 1½ per cent increase in inpatient days and 5 per cent increase in clinic visits over the budgeted estimates. We continue to look for ways to save. For example, over the past two years we have cut more than 35 per cent in energy consumption per square foot of hospital space.

But it is our achievements in service and in scholarship that gratify us most. The refurbished Hematology-Oncology Clinical Treatment Center on Kirstein 3, headed by Drs. Lowell Schnipper and Stephen Robinson, is one example. Another is the growth of nuclear medicine under Dr. Gerald Kolodny, or the flourishing of gerontology under Dr. John Rowe. The Alternative Birth Center, created with the help of the Permanent Charity Fund of Boston, is a milestone for our obstetrics and nursing service. In orthopedics, Dr. Augustus White's biomechanics laboratory has opened up new collaboration with MIT. And there are many, many others.

I do want to make special mention of Dr. David G. Freiman, who retired this year as pathologist-in-chief at Beth Israel and Mallinckrodt Professor of Pathology at Harvard Medical School. The qualities of this institution of which we are most proud are those brought about in large measure through his leadership, and his impact for good will persist for many years ahead. Fortunately, Dr. Freiman will continue to serve the hospital as a planning associate in my office. And we welcome our new pathologist-in-chief and Mallinckrodt Professor, Dr. Harold F. Dvorak, who previously headed immunopathology at Massachusetts General Hospital.

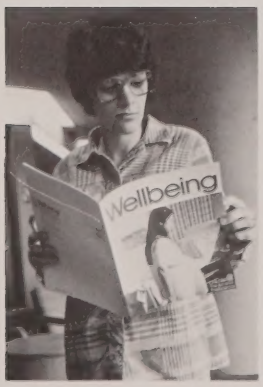
Our research effort was bolstered with the recruitment of Mrs. Joan Pinck as assistant director for research administration, to help ensure maximum administrative support for our research productivity.

This year, we celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Beth Israel Home Care Program, one more feather in the cap of nursing (except that nurses don't seem to wear caps anymore). It's also a credit to the Urban Medical Group who provide the needed medical staffing. Urban Medical Group, incidentally, offers a model for care delivery which may reverse the exodus of doctors from the urban inner core.

We've turned Kirstein Hall around! That is, we moved the entrance from Brookline Avenue to the circle touching the Feldberg Building plaza. A host of physical facilities were dedicated, honoring donors too numerous to mention but far too generous not to thank, at least collectively. We've developed a program in planned giving for donors who want their assets to serve them and their loved ones during life but later accrue to the hospital, a method which offers them impressive savings recently made available under new tax laws. Our director of development, Mrs. Helaine Miller, will be delighted to tell you more about this very special opportunity.

Thanks to a rejuvenated public relations effort under Mr. J. Antony Lloyd, our magazine, Wellbeing, is attracting national attention with its first issue on pregnancy and birth; the next, on breast cancer, is off the presses this week. If you don't receive a copy soon, write for one.

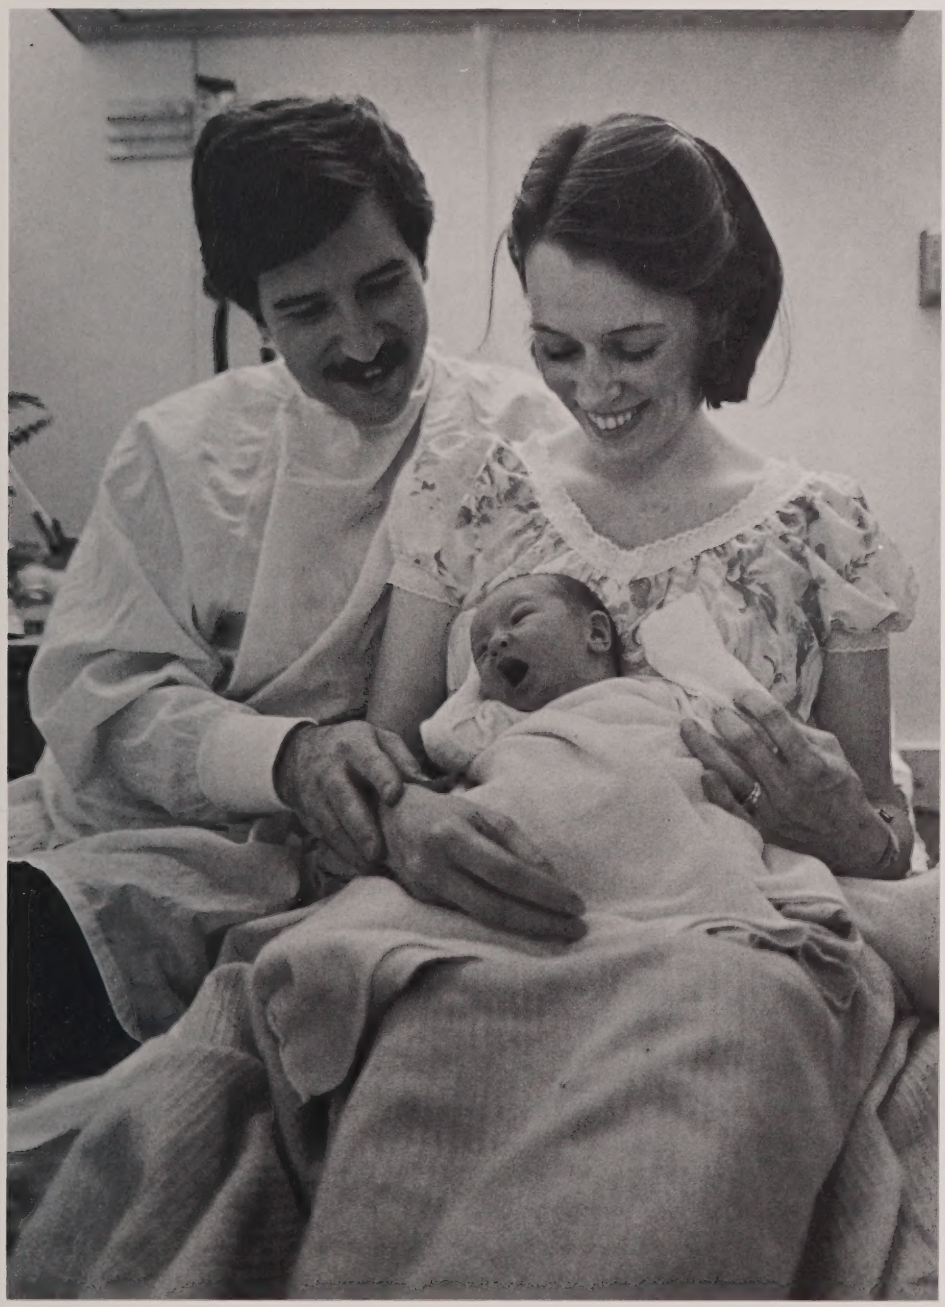
In my own office, Miss Katherine Shepherd retires with my sincere appreciation for her skill, devotion, good taste, and hard work. Happily, Ms. Linda Davis now directs my life.



"Genuine attitude and concern for my well-being—both physical and mental."
—A Beth Israel Patient

There is no doubt in my mind that our Board president, Mr. Stanley H. Feldberg, has been a major determinant of our success over the past three years. Medical and administrative staff salute him for having added further lustre to the highest aims and achievements of this complex institution. I want to voice my deep gratitude, too, for his leadership and for the graduate course in management he's generously given us.

In the years ahead, we shall continue to work for an efficient hospital that is capable, scholarly, and warmly personal. The excellence we seek will require more attention to teaching and to research, as well as to patient care; more attention to fundraising as well as to economic operation. The excellence we achieve will derive from your interest and support, as well as the goodwill, capability, and hard work of our professional staff, employees, students, and volunteers. We look forward to joining with you, professionals in partnership with the people, in meeting the challenge.



"The family-centered nature of the care—emphasizing and developing the role of father as well as mother were particularly liked by us."
—A Beth Israel Mother

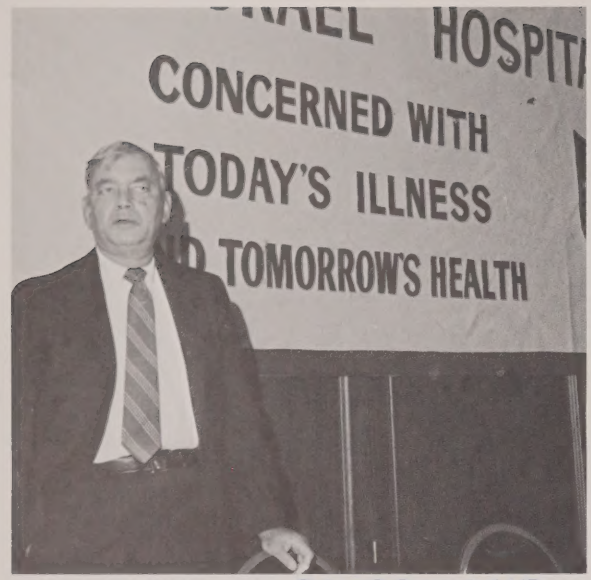
"The nurses are absolutely the greatest. Completely professional in what they do and at the same time so compassionate and friendly. It's something I'll always remember about my labor and delivery."
—A Beth Israel Mother

"The genuine warmth toward the personal needs of each patient is great. A great degree of professionalism. Primary care nursing is great."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"I expect my relationship with your hospital will continue for some time. But rather than fearing the cold bureaucratic clumsiness I have grown to expect from large organizations, it is comforting to know I will be cared for by people as exceptional and dedicated as these."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"Everyone was readily available yet respected our privacy."
—A Beth Israel Patient

Remarks by
Robert G. Petersdorf, MD
President, Affiliated Hospitals Center



Robert G. Petersdorf, MD

"I was treated with respect and dignity by all parties concerned with my stay at the hospital from the security guard at the front entrance to the specialist who performed the surgery. It is with great pride when I refer to the Beth Israel Hospital."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"You receive a lot more attention than in most hospitals that I have been in. Much more time is spent with you and your individual needs."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"They really outdid themselves to make us feel like people and not just patients. That kind of treatment obviously hastened my recovery."
—A Beth Israel Patient

"The sense of really trying to help the patient was ever present and seemingly at all levels. Nursing was particularly outstanding. The 'primary nursing' idea is very sound."
—A Beth Israel Patient

The challenges to all hospitals in the 1980's will be very great indeed and teaching hospitals will face particularly tough sledding. During the 1960's and 1970's, teaching hospitals were viewed as being large, urban, specialized, and catering predominantly to indigents. In actuality, this has not been the case. Rather than fitting this stereotype, teaching hospitals vary markedly in the type of teaching they do, their degree of affiliation with universities, their ownership, their size and their financing. Moreover, there have been a number of recent developments that have had profound effects on teaching hospitals.

- First, there has been a marked increase in the number of students of all types, particularly medical students, but other health professionals have been present in profusion as well;
- Second, there has been a doubling of the number of house officers;
- Third, there has been a sharp increase in biomedical research and research training;
- Fourth, there have been marked changes in curriculum. In recent years in particular, there has been a change from specialty training to primary care;
- Fifth, there has been a marked change in reimbursement patterns; nowadays, teaching hospitals derive over 80 per cent of their revenues from third parties;
- And, finally, teaching hospitals have become the place for continuing medical education for physicians and other health professionals.

A corollary of these multiple functions of a teaching hospital is that teaching hospitals cost more. Higher costs are incurred because teaching hospitals have house staff and fellows; medical student teaching is costly; research is costly, and never really pays for itself. Full-time faculty are costly. In addition, the hospital is expected to provide special services; it tends to have a complex case mix; it is expected to provide sophisticated laboratory and diagnostic procedures, and to mount modern outpatient departments; the emergency room and OPD are characteristic loss leaders.

You recognize, of course, that your hospital, the Beth Israel, contains all of these features. It is useful to highlight them because they define your obligations in specific terms. They also point up the interlocking fortunes between the hospital and the medical school in undergraduate teaching, in research and, to a progressively greater extent, in graduate education.

One of the missions that a teaching hospital needs to define for itself is its mission in the community. This definition is partially dependent upon the community's expectations of the hospital. While it was possible in the past for teaching hospitals to isolate themselves from the community, this is no longer the case for most institutions and I have learned this morning that hospitals such as yours have always had closely-interlocked relationships with their communities, and this will grow over the years.

These expectations notwithstanding, however, the community must realize that teaching hospitals differ substantially from community hospitals in their organizational patterns. Many have a large full-time staff, or at the very least, a number of part-time faculty, as well as a voluntary staff. This in turn demands a different staff organization. In particular, teaching hospitals are characterized by the presence of strong department heads who usually are also chairpersons of the medical school's academic departments. The department heads in turn not infrequently find themselves in conflict between their hospital role and their medical school role.

Finally, a physician group that is almost unique to teaching hospitals is the house staff. They are probably the single most important feature that distinguishes teaching from community hospitals.

Teaching hospitals in the 1980's are expected to be the leaders in innovative programs and techniques both in the teaching and in the practice of medicine. For the educational program to attain its objectives, teaching hospitals must have access to the latest medical technology.

It is necessary to recognize that teaching hospitals' costs are uniformly higher than those of nonteaching hospitals of similar size by almost any measure that can be employed—total cost, per diem cost, cost per admission, or cost per case for a particular diagnosis. The evidence that this is the case is substantial. Nationally, house staff costs alone will reach $1.3 billion in 1979. In addition to the costs of medical education, the intensity of care provided in teaching hospitals is an important contributor to their cost. Patients have infinitely more complex problems, are much sicker, and are more likely to have serious complications. Moreover, what scanty data are available indicate that laboratory studies, x rays and other diagnostic maneuvers are more heavily utilized in teaching hospitals.

A great deal of effort has been expended to separate patient care from teaching costs in teaching hospitals. Not only is this difficult, but most studies have lost sight of the fact that, in addition to patient care, education is a tangible product of the hospital. In other words, the teaching hospitals sell two commodities: patient service and future health manpower.

Let me now identify two major forces that will determine the hospital environment in the foreseeable future. The first is the increasing demand for comprehensive health care services. Manifestations of this trend may be summarized as follows:

- In a number of situations, hospitals have been requested to provide services for treatment of such diseases as alcoholism and drug abuse. Other socially oriented programs, such as the explicit care of the aged—geriatric medicine, an effort in which you are already engaged—are likely to follow.
- Hospitals are expected to be accountable for the indigent because they have used Hill-Burton funds in their construction programs.
- Third-party payers have demanded substitution of outpatient for inpatient care, resulting in increased construction of ambulatory care units.
- There have been demands for chronic care beds including long-term care, hospice care, and self-care.
- There have been demands from HEW, business and labor for new delivery care packages such as HMOs.

Many of these pressures have already been brought to bear on the BI and we will see even more of these pressures in the foreseeable future.

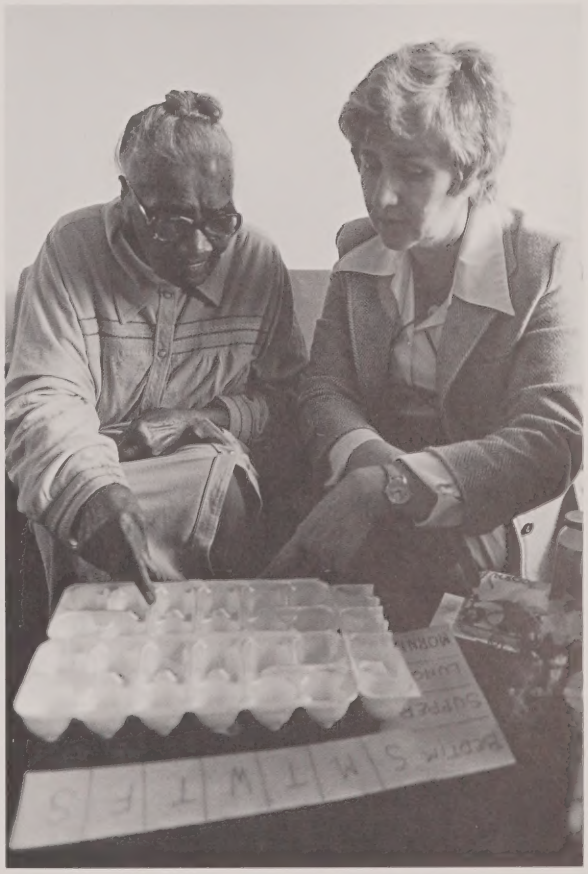
A second major force deals with the limitation on available resources. Manifestations of this force are:

- Proposals to put a cap on revenues including a demand to do so by legislation.
- Insurers, business and government as purchasers of care have made numerous attempts to reduce their outlays for health services through such mechanisms as claims review, health education promotion, and increasing attempts to limit Medicare and Medicaid expenditures.
- Certificate of Need legislation is used by almost all states to restrict the expansion of hospital facilities. This legislation is likely to be extended. As a result, it has been progressively more difficult to gather funds for hospital construction.
- Although PSRO programs are touted to be measures of quality control they are, in fact, measures for reducing costs. Indeed, the efficacy of these programs is being evaluated on the basis of cost savings.
- Hospitals themselves, in order to meet the goals set by the "voluntary effort," have kept increases to a lower level than in recent years. Your hospital has been eminently successful in doing that.
- The majority of states have established some form of voluntary or mandatory budget review for hospitals.

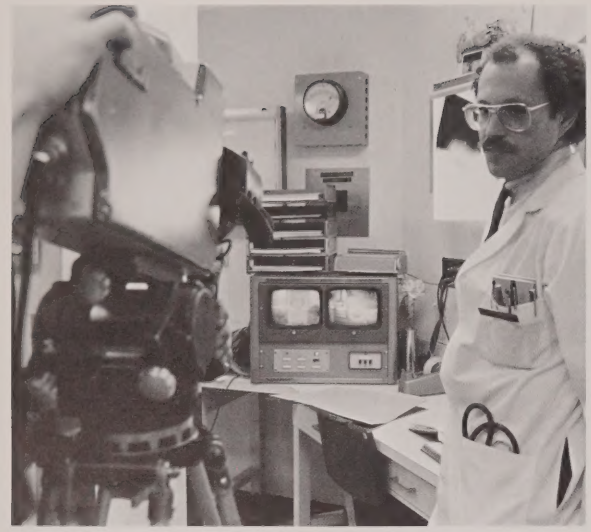
A consequence of this list of pressures on hospitals is that the institutions are having a difficult time maintaining their financial position. Hospitals will counter these pressures by becoming involved in areas that are less controlled than inpatient care; they will cross-subsidize services where it is permissible; they will develop comprehensive health delivery packages; and they will try to generate funds by improving productivity and instituting internal operating efficiencies.

In order for the teaching hospital to survive in this era, the administration, the professional staff, and the trustees will have to work together much more closely in the future to meet these challenges. The medical staff structure will be more closely tied to administrative and policy making functions and more power will be shared among administrators and trustees and clinicians. As one with a foot in both camps, I consider it an integral part of my job to build the bridge between administration and the clinical staff.

I should also say that before physicians can be expected to share such power, they must be willing to assume the responsibility that goes with the decision-making process. That is, they must take time to sit on the committees that formulate these decisions; they must do the homework that is often required to make a meaningful contribution to the decision-



"'People' (your nurses and doctors) really cared about 'people' (me) and all of the other patients in our unit. I also feel that I now understand my disease and how I can live a fairly normal life after my recovery, thanks to your 'educational program' for patients."
—A Beth Israel Patient



"They made me feel like I was the only patient in the hospital."
—A Beth Israel Patient

making process; and they must be able to follow the recommendations that committees consisting of their colleagues have made.

More importantly, they must make conscious efforts to eliminate traditional frictions. This is particularly relevant in hospitals such as yours, with their large voluntary staff, full-time staff, and house staff. Specifically:

- The voluntary staff must be willing to relinquish some responsibility for the care of patients to the house staff. Although this is a delicate matter, it can be done while maintaining ultimate responsibility for the patient and a degree of control commensurate with the capabilities of the house staff.
- The house staff, in turn, must be prepared to communicate freely with the attending physicians, to keep the attending staff informed, to treat them courteously and not, as is so often the case, assume that all attendings become obsolescent when they finish their training.
- Full-time staff, on the other hand, must move somewhat in the direction of the voluntary staff in assuming greater responsibility for patients. The days when a full-time faculty member could sequester him- or herself in the laboratory to emerge occasionally to see a patient are over. The full-time staff in teaching hospitals must assume greater responsibility for patient care.
- Conversely, the full-time staff must be tolerant of the voluntary staff and vice versa. Too often these groups perceive themselves to be in competition for patients. In order to survive in the academic environment—particularly one as competitive and stringent as the one at Harvard—full-time faculty must do research; they must teach; and they are often given significant administrative responsibilities. By and large, this does not permit them enough time to compete with able practitioners. Conversely, the practicing voluntary staffs must realize that the full-time faculty have to eat and that part of their bread comes from taking care of patients. A comfortable relationship between these groups requires trust, goodwill, and understanding.

Competition between physicians will not be tolerated graciously by the public, and the mistaken notion of the FTC that competition will bring lower prices notwithstanding, in the long run continued competition between physicians will bring more government controls, not fewer.

Speaking of competition, competition between hospitals is a prevalent lesion in our health care system because it leads to increased costs. It leads to duplication of facilities, equipment and staff. And, while you may not like to hear it, it has thrived particularly in the Harvard hospitals. The Harvard hospitals seem to compete at everything whether it be internship rating, faculty distinction, availability of technological devices, members of their boards of trustees, affiliations with smaller hospitals, referrals and, for all I know, even cafeteria services. One of the inherent characteristics of competition is that we all like to win, and whenever people compete there have to be winners and losers. And sometimes losing causes hurt pride, ill will, less cooperation, and above all the desire to have at it again so that a victory may be gained eventually. When competition extends to teaching hospitals, it is not only personally stressful, but it is difficult to defend in an era of cost-consciousness and public accountability.

A well-known economist has said that teaching hospitals are unmanageable because, in contrast to industry where the only standard of measurement is profit and loss, in teaching hospitals (and in university centers in general) there is so much ego involvement that efficiencies are rejected, collaboration is avoided, and cooperation is shunned all for the sake of the professional ego. It is clear that we will have to manage those little devils—our egos—much more effectively. From what I've seen this morning, you're doing it well at the BI.

I also hope that I am not considered too irreverent when I say that from time to time there may be better ways to do it than at Harvard. There are many fine teaching centers where the catchwords are integration, cooperation, and, occasionally, even amalgamation rather than competition. Although it may be difficult to fly in the face of tradition, I would like to see much more cooperation among the hospitals in the Longwood area and, in particular, between BI and AHC. I know Dr. Rabkin and many others on your staff well, and I hope that in the foreseeable future we will be able to embark on some joint ventures that would benefit our students, our professional staffs and, above all, our patients.

General Statement

Beth Israel Hospital is a 452-bed teaching hospital affiliated with Harvard Medical School. It is one of Boston's largest general hospitals with extensive inpatient services and a broad range of ambulatory care including a walk-in clinic and 24-hour emergency unit, and medical research and teaching facilities. Beth Israel recently completed its first half-century as a major Harvard teaching hospital on Boston's Brookline Avenue.
